

To whom it may concern,

As a student studying to be a future teacher, I am particularly interested in the framework revision concerning 10th grade World History, as addressed in Chapter 15 of your framework. I found a lot of the revisions and additions particularly interesting, but I would have loved to see some sort of an emphasis on how developing and developed countries are dealing with the magnitude of climate change. An emphasis on the standards revision seems to focus on the developmental potential of such countries as Brazil, and China. Having the students look into how these emerging economies are dealing with the effects of climate change might be a welcome addition to the new framework.

Sincerely,

Joon Soo Kim
